Australian in torn trousers controversy

Star Aussie batsman Conan Fulton was at the center of a wardrobe malfunction last week. According to one witness, several major seams gave way in crucial parts of the batsman's training shorts during a fielding exercise. He told The Cow "Well, it was pretty cataclysmic. I mean - you could practically see the entire wedding tackle." "Strewth," commented Fulton, "all I did was bend down. I would've thought the bloody things would have stood up to more than that. This is none of your cheap rubbish either - they cost me $15 from Ross." When asked if he intended to replace or repair the offending garment, Fulton went on to explain "I dunno yet. I'll see what the missus says. I don't want to be the butt of everyone's jokes."

Team captain in woman scandal

Corinthians captain Kelly Dunagan was seen yesterday in the company of an unmarried lady, The Cow has learned. The two were observed standing adjacent to each other, occasionally making eye contact and exchanging conversational pleasantries. "It's disgusting," said Hollywood Reporter columnist Polly Snapper. "I've followed celebrity gossip for years, and this is always how it starts."

"We're just friends," said Dunagan when cornered by our reporter yesterday. "And get off my flower bed." The lady in question was later seen dodging paparazzi at a local Starbucks, where she gave her name as 'Kelly.' This is typical behavior, says Polly Snapper. "Brad, Angelina, TomKat - they always use the name 'Kelly' at Starbucks." Watch for more developments in the next edition...

Team captain in fruit scandal

Casuals captain Phil Traynor yesterday denied reports that he was seeking professional help for his much-publicized fruit addiction. "It's not true," he said, underlining our opening sentence. "It's just that I always seem to be the one asked to get the fruit for any Corinthian CC gathering."

"This is typical behavior," commented psychiatrist Dr. Canaan Banana. "Sometimes it's linked to childhood fruit abuse, peel envy, or excessive parental vitamin education. He's in no danger unless he reaches the dairy stage, or taking sudden interest in sheep." Watch for more developments in the next edition.. (possibly).
